RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 118 pages. Original publisher: Washington: U. S. G. P. O. , 2010. LC Number: KF25 . E2 2009n OCLC Number: (OCoLC)613333786 Subject: Predatory lending -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 11 Other countries can, indeed, do the same. Geothermal resources have been identified in over 90 countries in the world, and Accord-ing to the excellent MIT report, A View Toward Geothermal En-ergy, the potential in the United States from enhanced geothermal system is, in fact, a prominent part of the future energy outlook of this country. But the key that is important to realize, the keys to a successful geothermal development are efficient and comprehensive inter-disciplinary geothermal research, and proper resource management during utilization. Let me, therefore, conclude my opening statement by identifying some areas where cooperation with Iceland could benefit the United States in the creation of a major U. S. geothermal program. First, extensive research on geophysical exploration, assessment of low temperature - but also high temperature - and deep and con-ventional geothermal resources, including the so-called hot, dry rock, and supercritical geothermal resources. Second, developing and extending existing drilling technology, for example, by drawing on the vast experience gained in the oil and the gas industry. Third, cooperation between research institutions and universities and financial sectors as now, for example, exists in the Iceland Deep Drilling Project, which has comprehensive involvement from U. S. partners. Fourth, studying more comprehensive and efficient management of geothermal resources without over-exploiting them. Fifth, modeling the nature of geothermal systems based, for ex-ample, on the methods and the tools already being developed at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory in California with a significant con-tribution from Icelandic scientists. Sixth, facilitating investments by Icelandic energy companies, banks, and investors, in cooperation with...
