Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Papers and Proceedings, Twenty-Second Annual Meeting, American Sociological Society, Vol. 22: Held at Washington December 27-30, 1927 The lines of social research have largely converged on the question of behavior reactions and the processes involved in their formation and modification. It appears that the particular behavior patterns and the total personality are overwhelmingly conditioned by the types of situations and trains of experience encountered by the individual in the course of his life. The question of heredity remains a factor, but this is also being studied in terms of behavior; it is, in fact, defined as the phylogenetic memory of experience - memory organically incorporated. In approaching problems of behavior it is possible to emphasize - to have in the focus of attention for working purposes - either the attitude, the value, or the situation. The attitude is the tendency to act, representing the drive, the affective states, the wishes. The value represents the object or goal desired, and the situation represents the configuration of the factors conditioning the behavior reaction. It is also possible...

Reviews

Completely among the finest book I have actually read through. It is probably the most remarkable book we have study. I discovered this book from my dad and i suggested this book to learn.
