The head of serpents will suck, the tongue will slay; I protest. 6. Will he see the rivers, the flowing streams of honey and milk? He will frustrate his own labour, and not enjoy the fruits of it; his pay is as it were travail, and he shall not rejoice. 4. Give up his wealth; or perhaps confess his childishness; in either case the intention is much the same. Childishness; Gesenius renders the word youth, juvenile age, and translates, His bones are full of juvenile strength, but the meaning seems rather to be juvenile weakness, puerility, childishness, 5. / protest; Zophar says that he is not maintaining anything abstruse or singular, but merely what everyone knows. One mistake that seems to have been made about Hebrew poetry is that the sense is necessarily broken at the pauses in the metre; whereas it appears often to be...
