Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The English Liturgies of 1549 and 1661: Compared With Each Other and With the Ancient Liturgies The liturgy of 1549 was for the most part a genuine attempt to reproduce in an English form the essential features of the ancient Latin service of the Holy Eucharist. It was superseded in 1552 by another in which its various parts were rearranged and its language was considerably altered with a view to giving greater prominence to the reception of Holy Communion by the worshippers, as distinguished from the offering of eucharistic worship; and in all its main features this is the service which we still retain. But on two occasions it was set aside for a few years, first in favour of the Latin Missal during the reign of Mary and afterwards in favour of the Puritan Directory under the Commonwealth; and on each occasion when it was brought back into use, first in 1559 after the accession of Elizabeth and secondly in 1661 after the restoration of Charles II., it underwent revisions in which some of the features of the ancient service were restored. The purpose of the present treatise is first to compare together the short-lived rite of 1549 and that of 1661 as we now have it; and in order that the force of the alterations may be rightly understood it is necessary to indicate when and how they were introduced in the successive revisions. Besides this, the two rites are examined in relation to the general body of liturgies of the ancient churches, and more especially to the use of Sarum which was the immediate precursor of the rite of 1549 and the...
